'Partnering' is key to contracting local jobs

NEWTON — The Sussex County Economic Development Partnership (SCEDP) hosted its third annual Construction Industry Showcase recently. This business-to-business event created an opportunity for local professionals to find out about projects that are coming on line in Sussex County, what is just about to open, or what is being planned.

"This event was a perfect venue for professionals in the industry to meet and greet, partner and learn about innovative solutions to challenges within the industry," said Tammie Horsfield, SCEDP president. "Our competition is not the business here in Sussex County, it's those businesses across county and state lines that are taking our dollars home with them."

The State of New Jersey's Economic Growth Strategy lists "partnering" as a top priority. The Sussex County Economic Development Partnership supports this strategy and offers networking opportunities for all businesses related to the construction industry in an effort to assist businesses in developing alliances and establishing partnerships.

Ted Brennan, vice president of TM Brennan Contractors Inc., a local firm and the main sponsor of the showcase, said, "The showcase is a great opportunity for encouraging local contractors to be proactive in promoting themselves and to work together to secure development opportunities within the county."

Another sponsor was Houghton Quarty Warr (HQW) Architects in Newton. "There's so much talent within Sussex County that creating relationships with other local businesses has become a cornerstone of our strategic growth plan," said HQW Marketing Director Steve Skorski. "The SCEDP's Construction Industry Showcase is the pre-eminent event each year that really assists us in reaching out and developing these partnerships. We are able to showcase our most recent successes while at the same time line up teams for future projects. Whether it's attorneys, contractors or engineers, in our 37 years in Sussex county, we've never seen the quality of local businesses at such a high level."

Sussex County municipalities designated as smart-growth areas also displayed their achievements and plans for anticipated development. Vernon had a 3D experience of its anticipated Main Street development available through Township Engineer Lou Kneip. Commerce Bank, one of the largest construction lenders in New Jersey, was represented through sponsorship as well.

"The SCEDP will continue to foster partnering and increased awareness of the strategies and benefits available to the Sussex County construction community," Horsfield said.

For information on SCEDP events for 2008, visit www.SCEDP.com or call (973) 300-1988.

Weakening economy should prompt at-risk workers to update resumes

By EILEEN ALT POWELL
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — If you're worried about losing your job as the U.S. economy weakens, it's time to update your resume in case you need to hunt for new employment.

Your goal should be making your resume stand out from the hundreds of other resumes that employers receive.

It used to be that a resume — which is a brief, written summary of an individual's education, work and accomplishments — started with a "statement of purpose," something akin to "I'm seeking a challenging position that offers professional growth." But that doesn't make the jobseeker distinctive from the competition.

"You really need to highlight your last five years of experience and concrete accomplishments," said John A. Challenger, chief executive officer of the Challenger, Gray & Christmas Inc. outplacement firm in Chicago. "That's what makes you stand out."

Challenger said, for example, that "saying you are a marketing executive with experience in brand management" doesn't make you stand out because most market executives have those skills. But "saying that you are a marketing executive who developed the concept and designed the materials for a new brand" reveals much more, he said.

Job applicants also have to realize that they're applying to work for very busy people.

It should go without saying that all resumes have some things in common:

- They're attractive to look at, whether mailed or e-mailed
- The content has been checked for typos and grammatical errors
- The contact information is correct

Kate Wendleton, president of the Five O'Clock Club, a career coaching and outplacement firm in New York, said jobseekers also should prepare a cover letter for their resumes.

In brief, it should say you've been following the company's activities, that you have a number of years of experience in the relevant field, that your most important accomplishments are X and Y, and that you'd appreciate 20 minutes of the would-be employer's time to discuss the job.

Workers — especially those who are changing fields — need to make sure their resumes use the right vocabulary in describing their skills, said Wendleton, author of "Packaging Yourself: The Targeted Resume."

"We had a person with banking experience, an executive who specialized in check processing, who came in to work with us," she said. "Now he wanted to work in hospitals, but they don't do check processing. So he had to get the word 'check' off his resume and emphasize transaction processing, which hospitals do."

Those who have done a lot of job hopping — which could make a worker look unreliable — can make it less obvious in how they organize their resumes, she said.
